The copy is professional, technically grounded, and maintains a consistent personal-yet-expert tone throughout. It effectively balances high-level value propositions with specific technical details, making it well-suited for a developer portfolio targeting startups. Minor improvements could be made by reducing marketing clichés and ensuring CTA labels perfectly align with their section headings.

Clarity 2

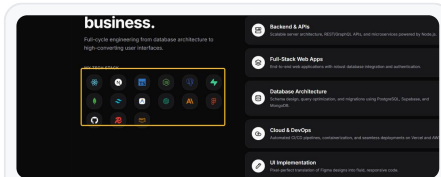

1. The word "supercharge" in "Services that supercharge your business" is an overused marketing cliché that lacks specific meaning.

Minor

"Services that supercharge your business."

TRY

"Engineering services to scale your business."

2. The phrase "move the needle" is business jargon that is less impactful than a direct statement of value.

Minor

"I'm Jignesh Wadhvani (friends call me Jiggs). I build web applications and digital products that actually move the needle for your business. Good software should just work without getting in the way of what users are trying to do."

TRY

Change "actually move the needle for your business" to "deliver measurable growth for your business."

3. The CTA " Let's Chat" is inconsistent with the section heading "Book a free discovery call," creating slight ambiguity about whether the user is starting a text chat or scheduling a meeting.
